

I Think I Might Be Transgender.

Rights.
Respect.
Responsibility.

Advocates
for Youth
Rights. Respect. Responsibility.

“Being a young transgender person is simultaneously terrifying and terrific. I get to shape my expression to match my internal desires, and love who I see in the mirror. There is also pushback for that happiness, which makes the journey hard at times.”

- Aiden

What Does It Mean to Be Transgender?

Nearly everyone is assigned a sex at their birth, based on whether they have a penis or vagina. Most are raised with the idea that boys have penises and girls have vaginas. As we grow up, there's a lot of stuff that goes along with whether we were assigned boy or girl, like what kinds of clothes we wear, how we should look, and how we are expected to act. But for some people, as they grow up they begin to feel like the gender that they are does not match their assigned sex.

For instance, someone born with a vagina may feel, act and identify as a man or someone born with a penis may feel, act and identify as a woman. These folks often describe themselves as transgender or trans. Some folks find that neither "man" nor "woman" fits them and they prefer other terms, like non-binary, genderqueer, or genderfluid. Everyone's experience of gender is valid. Everyone has the right to live as the gender that fits them best.

Sex - when you're born, the doctor decides if you are male or female based on if you have a penis or vagina.

Gender - What defines someone as feminine or masculine, including how people expect you to behave as well as how you feel and identify.

Sexual orientation - to whom you are sexually attracted. Sexual orientation isn't dictated by sex or gender; trans folks can be any sexual orientation.

Cisgender - When your sex assigned at birth and your gender match up as society expects, as in, someone born with a vagina feels like a girl.

Intersex characteristics
- Someone with intersex characteristics has genitalia and/or chromosomes that don't fit into the typical medical binary of female and male sex.

1.6 MILLION
FOLKS IN THE
US ARE TRANSGENDER¹

How Do I Know if I'm Transgender — And Am I Normal?

Being trans is completely normal — and it's nothing new! For as long as people have existed, people who do not have a mainstream conception of their gender have existed, in many different cultures and places. Figuring out your gender can be difficult or confusing. Many transgender people know from a young age that they don't identify with their sex and/or gender assigned at birth.

You may feel more comfortable expressing yourself, or being known as a gender and/or sex other than the one you were assigned at birth. This might be shown in how you dress, cut your hair, or what name and pronouns you use. You may feel uncomfortable with your body. These are just a few feelings that transgender people experience. Everyone's experience is different.

If you think you might be trans, try asking yourself these questions:

- How do I feel when someone uses pronouns, gendered terms to refer to me, like "sir" or "ma'am"?
- Do I feel like my body doesn't match me/how I feel?
- When I was younger, did I like to pretend to be or dress up as a different gender?
- Do I feel like my gender assigned at birth doesn't fit me?

It's okay if you don't have answers for these questions yet, or if your feelings aren't clear yet.

Discovering and understanding your gender can take time, and it's normal for it to develop or change over time. Only you will know how to label, identify and express yourself correctly.

A purple square is partially visible in the top-left corner. A large, irregular yellow shape with a torn-edge effect serves as a background for the text.

“Lean in to how exciting this can be! Create art, have conversations with other trans folks, write out your experience. It is so special and beautiful to be genderqueer, because each person's experience is unique!”

- Lyss

What is it like being young and Trans?

Young people are paving the way for greater acceptance, less stigma and equal rights. Despite this, transphobia (disliking trans people for being transgender) still exists. It's important to remember that your gender is only one part of you, and everyone has different experiences. Some trans youth may be worried about their friends' or peers' responses. Some might be uncomfortable talking about their gender with family or friends, while others may feel confident. There isn't one right or wrong way to feel about your gender, coming to terms with it, or coming out.

Finding people who will support you in your journey can help make it easier. Online communities have enabled young people to connect and find other LGBTQ young people. Finding community may be difficult at first, but it's important to feel connected to and supported by a community that understands you. Many people have blogs or YouTube channels where they talk about their experiences. There may also be groups at your school or on your campus that you can connect with.

80% of Young People believe laws should protect trans people from job discrimination²

62% of Young People believe trans people should be able to use the bathroom that matches their gender³

All Gender Restroom

“If they’re supportive, talk to your friends. Your friends are there to help you, and can be the first ones to use the pronouns you deserve and truly support your identity journey.”

- Alex

Should I/How Do I Come Out?

Coming out is the process of accepting your gender, figuring out how open you want to be about it, and telling those you want to know. You don't have to come out if you don't want to or before you're ready, or be open about your gender to everyone. If you do choose to come out, it's important to put your safety first. Start by choosing someone you trust, like a close friend, a sibling, parent, or a guidance counselor to confide in. There may be a wide range of reactions and having someone to talk to can help. Some people don't understand what it means to be transgender and it may be hard to know who will listen and be supportive.

Some friends will accept you. Others may turn away from you or tell other people without your permission. Telling family can sometimes be difficult. Some families are highly supportive, and some are not. You may choose to tell everyone or very few people, or somewhere in between.

Coming out is very personal. There is no wrong way to do it. When LGBTQ youth accept themselves, though, most say they feel calmer, happier, and more confident. Some transgender people transition as well as coming out.

"Do what feels good and don't be afraid to change your mind if something doesn't work."

- Lauren

What's Transitioning?

Transitioning is the process of changing how you are perceived by others so that how you feel, look and are treated all match up. Some trans people may transition socially, legally or medically. Some may only transition socially, while some may not transition at all. The goal of transitioning is to affirm your gender so there is no right or wrong way to transition or to be transgender. Gender affirming care is the term for working with professionals to undergo a transition process.

Someone socially transitioning may:

- Come out as transgender
- Choose to go by a new name
- Change the way they look or dress
- Use different pronouns and ask others to use those pronouns when referring to them.

Someone legally transitioning may:

Change their legal name and/or sex on documents like their:

- Birth certificate
- ID
- Driver's license

Someone medically transitioning may:

- Get surgery to create or remove the vagina, ovaries, uterus, penis, testes or breasts,
- Take hormones therapy to create a more 'feminine' or 'masculine' look and/or get laser-hair removal.

Medical transitioning can be very expensive and some people may not be able to afford it. Some people just don't want surgery and that is completely normal too. A person does not need to have had surgery to be transgender. People who do have surgery are not more transgender than those who don't have surgery.

Transitioning looks different for everyone. Some transition when they are young, others transition when they're older. Some transition over long periods of time and some transition quicker. Some don't transition at all. Only you can decide what is best for you.

If you chose to transition, similarly to coming out, your safety is most important. Start by choosing someone to confide in. Decide who you want to tell and what steps you might want to take to transition.

Some states and even school districts have restrictions on when, if, and how young transgender people can receive gender affirming care or express who they are. Different states have different requirements for transitioning, especially if you aren't 18 yet. It's important to find out what transitioning is like where you live.

Pronouns are words others use to refer to us.

For example, you could say "My sister went to the store" or you could say "She went to the store".

Typically 'she/her' are used for women while "he/him" are used for men. Non-binary people may use "they/them".

It's important to ask what pronouns someone wants and only to use those.

So what about my sexuality???

Gender identity is different from sexual orientation. Trans people can be straight, gay, bisexual, asexual or queer just like cisgender/non-transgender people. Only you will know how to label yourself correctly and it's okay for your sexuality to change or develop over time. And, only you know your sexual orientation. You should use whatever term you feel most comfortable with; not what others tell you to. People who don't want to define sexuality based on the idea of two genders may use the term "queer" or "genderqueer."

"Not knowing exactly what your sexuality looks like is totally okay and completely normal. It took me years to fully come to terms with my sexuality and I still contemplate it on the regular. Take your time."

- Sriya

How Can I Have Safer Sex?

Being sexually healthy means deciding what you want and don't want to do with romantic/sexual partners, communicating clearly about your wants and needs, and taking precautions to protect yourself from STI's and unintended pregnancy, if you do decide to have sex.

Oral, anal, and vaginal sex, including sex with toys/dildos, all come with some risk of sexually transmitted infections, including HIV, so it's never a bad idea to practice safer sex and to get tested for STIs regularly.

It's also important to know that if someone with a penis and testicles, and someone with a vagina and uterus have vaginal intercourse, they can become pregnant; condoms and/or birth control are effective in preventing unintended pregnancy. Using a second method like the pill or the IUD can add even more protection from unintended pregnancy.

What about HIV and STIs?

HIV, human immunodeficiency virus, is a virus that you get from sexual fluids, from blood, or from breast milk of a person who has HIV. If you're having sex, it's a good idea to get tested regularly so you know your HIV status. It's a good health practice to get tested once a year. Knowing your HIV status is crucial to getting the care you need to stay healthy. Talking about your HIV status with partners is important too. That way you can make a plan that helps both of you stay healthy.

For oral or anal sex, condoms and dental dams can provide protection against HIV and STIs. You can also acquire HIV if you share needles for injecting drugs with a person who has HIV. To avoid this way of transmission, either don't inject drugs, or don't share needles. If you think you are likely to be exposed to HIV, for instance by having sex with a partner who is HIV positive, pre-exposure prophylaxis (PrEP) is a pill your doctor can prescribe that can give additional protection from HIV.

It's also important to know about sexually transmitted infections (STIs). These include chlamydia, gonorrhea, syphilis, HPV, and herpes. Some are chronic and, all left untreated, can have major impacts on your health. STIs don't always come with symptoms so it's important to ask your health care provider about them and get tested regularly. Condoms or dental dams also provide protection against STIs.

	Oral Sex	Anal Sex	Vaginal Sex
Risks	HIV and STIs	HIV and STIs	HIV and STIs, and Pregnancy
Protection	Condoms, dental dam,/ Daily use of PrEP	Condoms/ Daily use of PrEP	Condoms/ Birth Control, Daily use of PrEP

In a healthy relationship, both partners:

Respect one another.

Enjoy activities independent of one another, as well as together.

Discuss things calmly, allow for differences of opinion, and make compromises.

Use each others' preferred name and pronouns. Never use the wrong pronouns or name to intentionally hurt your partner.

Trust one another

Embrace each other's differences.

Respect each other's need for privacy.

Respect sexual boundaries and are able to say no to sex.

Approach sex and discussions about sex with the same mutual respect and trust applied to other issues

Have room to develop and mature, and value each other through these changes.

Share sexual histories and sexual health status with one another.

What about healthy relationships?

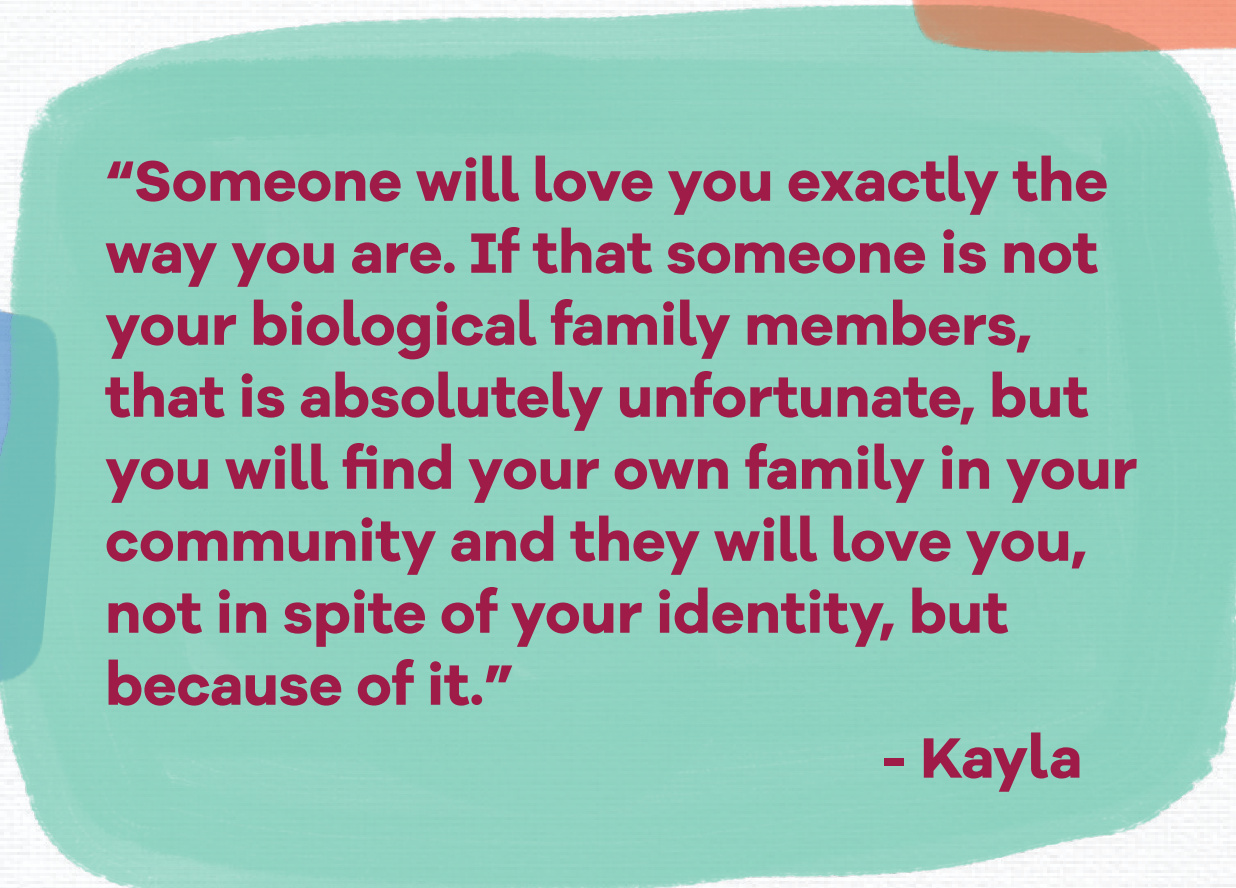

In unhealthy relationships, one or both partners are controlling, demanding, mean, and/or physically or emotionally abusive. Sometimes it's not so easy to decide if a relationship should be maintained the way it is, worked on, or ended before it goes any further. Partners should examine what is bothering them and what they would like to see change.

Talk over these questions with each other, or with someone you trust, like a friend, teacher, or counselor. Think about what, if anything, you can each do to make the other feel more comfortable in the relationship.

Healthy relationships rely on clear communication. Saying what you mean in a way that others will understand can eliminate many stresses on relationships.

You have a right to leave the relationship if it is not happy and healthy.

“Someone will love you exactly the way you are. If that someone is not your biological family members, that is absolutely unfortunate, but you will find your own family in your community and they will love you, not in spite of your identity, but because of it.”

- Kayla

What are my rights?

Everyone has the basic human right to be who they are. No one but you has the right to determine your gender identity or how you live. Trans people should be able to express their gender through their appearance, use the right bathrooms, and medically transition if they want to.

But sometimes, especially for young people, laws, school policies, and authorities don't reflect our basic rights.

Recently, politicians have chosen to harm and endanger transgender young people to score political points, and many states have restrictions on transgender life. It's a good idea to look up laws and policies in your state and school. If your school isn't supportive, and you're interested in working to change that, visit www.advocatesforyouth.org to find a community of youth activists who are working for acceptance and legal rights for trans young people.

Where can I go to feel safe or find support?

Think about supportive adults you know.

Is there a friend, neighbor, teacher, or school counselor you can trust?

Search online.

There may be supportive groups in your area, or online networks which can provide support.

Trans Affirming Schools Project Resource Guide.

If you are an adult ally working to build safer environments, check out the Trans Affirming Schools Project Resource Guide at advocatesforyouth.org/TASP

Check out communities of faith that might be supportive.

– many congregations have a mission of acceptance of LGBTQ people.

Check out AMAZE.org.

a fun and informative animated videos about sex, your body, and relationships.

<https://transequality.org/>

The National Center for Transgender Equality has resources to support transgender people with legal issues, physical care, mental health care, and more.

"The best thing about being part of the LGBTQ+ community is the support and friendships I've gained. I feel supported throughout my journey of and I hope that other LGBTQIA+ youth can find a community that makes them feel the same way."

- Anya

THINK YOU MIGHT BE TRANSGENDER?

YOU ARE LOVED & VALUED
AS YOU ARE, FOR WHO YOU ARE.

Visit www.advocatesforyouth.org/ithink
to see the entire I Think I Might Be series:

- I Think I Might Be Lesbian
- I Think I Might Be Gay
- I Think I Might Be Bisexual + Pansexual
- I Think I Might Be Asexual
- I Think I Might Be Transgender

ADVOCATES FOR YOUTH'S MISSION:

Advocates for Youth partners with young people and their adult allies to champion youth rights to bodily autonomy and build power to transform policies, programs and systems to secure sexual health and equity for all youth.

www.advocatesforyouth.org

YouTube.com/AdvocatesForYouth

Twitter.com/AdvocatesTweets

Instagram.com/AdvocatesForYouth

Facebook.com/Advocates4Youth

Citations:

1. Flores AR et al. How Many Adults Identify As Transgender In The United States? The Williams Institute, June 2016
2. Cohen CJ et al. Millennial Attitudes on LGBT Issues. GenForward, 2018
3. Page S and Crescente F. "For Millennials, a Consensus on Bathroom Use." USA Today, August 15, 2016.

1325 G STREET NW, SUITE 980
WASHINGTON DC 20005